A Little Ingenue

By BELLE MANIATES

Copyright, 1906, by P. C. Eastwood

Back in the midst of a hundred oaks stood the rambling old farmhouse, its lawn stretching into gardens, its gardens into orchards, orchards into meadows and meadows into forest. In this ideal old country place dwelt Elihu Wilkes, a stern, puritanical old man, his timid, docile wife and their orphaned granddaughter, Helene Lawrence, who, despite the fact that her upbringing had been strictly and narrowly supervised by her grandfather and that she had been allowed no playmates, was blooming into a winsome, affectionate maidenhood.

The last month had been one of delight to her. One day an automobile had broken down near the house, and its occupant, a beautiful young woman from the city, had stayed there while her chauffeur had returned for repairs.

How it was accomplished was a mystery, but Miss Marshall had won the old man's consent to her becoming a boarder at The Oaks for a few weeks, as she was in search of just such a place for rest and quiet after a gay season.

The night before her return to her home she took a beautiful stroll through the woods with Helene, whose eyes rested in wistful meditation upon her companion.

"Louise," she said in soft voiced tones, "I am lonely and sad at the thought of your leaving us."

"My dear little ingenue, I wish I could persuade your grandfather to let you accompany me. It is preposterous to think you have been shut up in one place, no matter how lovely it may be, for the whole of your life—never to have been to the city, even, or to have seen any young men save the farmers about here."

"Oh, Louise," said the young girl, with a bright blush, "I went to the little station today, and I saw the grocer. He has recently come there. Such a fine color and such beautiful eyes! Have you seen him?"

"Yes," replied Louise, the muscles of her face rigid in her effort to maintain composure. "I went to the station the other day, and I saw him."

"He is going to come to the places about here every day now to take orders, he says. Don't you think him a fine man?"

"Little ingenue, I can see how you think him handsome, but in my world in the city there are far handsomer men than he."

The young girl shook her head incredulously.

The next day Louise Marshall left The Oaks for her home and took Helene with her to the station, a distance of three miles through a stretch of cool dark trees. The little ingenue gazed sadly after the train that was bearing away one who had made life so different and so interesting to her. She had to leave the horse at the blacksmith's to be shod, so she returned on foot through the woods. As she walked slowly beneath the canopy of the olive tinted leaves she heard footsteps coming quickly behind her. It was the grocer.

"I just drove in from the next town and saw you as you were leaving the depot, and I overtook you to see if I might not walk with you."

The little ingenue was very tired and was willing at his bidding to walk more slowly. When they came to a fallen tree he urged her to sit down and rest. Knowing well that this was an opportunity that would never come to her again, she yielded to the temptation to sit down beside him.

The grocer was a quiet man, but she prattled ingeniously of her life, her friend and her home. Once when she turned to look at him his face was slightly turned from her. She contemplated with fascination his well shaped head, with its dark brown hair. Suddenly he turned, his eyes looking full into hers. She paled, and then the warm color suffused her face and brought a shining look into her eyes.

"I must go," she murmured confusedly, rising.

He rose too.

He Paid the Charges. A guest who had just registered at a hotel was approached by a boy with a telegram. It had $1 charges on it. "What?" said the guest before opening it. "A dollar charge. I won't pay it. Anybody who cannot pay for his message when wiring me is certainly a cheap one. Wait a minute, I'll just let you report this uncollected, and the sender may pay the charges."

At that he tore the envelope open. As he read a smile settled on his face, and, pulling a dollar from his pocket, he handed it to the boy.

"It's all right," he said. Then he threw the message on the counter. "Read it," he said to the clerk. The message read:

Papa's little girl sends him fifty bushels of love and wishes he was home to kiss her good night. NELLIE.

Help in Colonial Days. For help the colonial woman had to choose between an Indian who might scalp her if the mood or fancy so dictated, "blackamoors" not yet outgrown African savagery, the town poor sold to the highest bidder, bound convicts transported for crime or ignorant creatures who had been beguiled to board slavery and "free willers" discontented under and impatient for the end of the compact which bound them. Occasionally she had a chance to engage a respectable young woman who had come from England or Holland to find service, but she never failed to lose her through speedy marriage. —Good Housekeeping.

The Father of All Novels. A great branch of literature, undoubtedly the most widely popular and one in which England showed the way to the world, is the novel. In the year 1740 readers were delighted with a new kind of book, a prose romance not of legend, but of their own day and manners. It was the pioneer novel, was called "Pamela" the work of Samuel Richardson, a London printer, and the great success it met with soon brought forth a host of others.

"Wait," he urged. "Will you tell me your name, your first name?"

"Helene," she said.

"Helene, tell me if this hour you have spent here in the woods alone has been a pleasant one to you?"

"The pleasantest hour," she said frankly, "that I ever have spent."

"Helene, would you like a lifetime of such hours?"

"Oh," she gasped, "no one's life could be that!"

"Yours shall be, Helene. Will you leave home for me—to be my wife?"

Helene was very grave now. "You should not talk like that to me," she said reprovingly. "You should not say that. We do not know each other."

"Helene," he protested, "I know you the moment I looked into your eyes. Come to me without knowing me. Take me as I am."

"I must not. They would never let me."

"Leave that to me. Tell me you will marry me, and I will win their consent."

She sighed incredulously and looked at him wistfully.

When Louise had been home a few days she received a letter which read as follows:

My Dear Louise—I promised you that if my grandfather should ever relent and consent I would pay you a visit. I can now fulfill that promise. I am going to marry the grocer very soon, and I write to see if I may come to you while I make my simple preparations. My grandfather thought you might advise me what to purchase. Once more I sign myself the name you gave me.

THE LITTLE INGENUE.

Distasteful at the thought of the beautiful young girl wedding the grocer made Louise oblivious to the entrance of her favorite cousin, Roger Crofton, until he spoke. She handed him the letter.

"I recall that grocer perfectly," she said, with a sigh. "Good looking, I admit, and rather well educated, but not her equal! It shall not be!"

"How can you prevent it, Louise?"

"I'll introduce her to the world when she comes, and then by contrast she will see her mistake."

She began ordering some simple but elegant evening gowns for the debut of the young girl. When she arrived Louise saw in the transcendent beauty that radiated from every feature that she had no passing fancy to overthrow. The days that followed brought a round of gayety, and Helene was pleased and interested in this new life, but one day she came to Louise with sparkling eyes.

"He is coming Tuesday to take me home, and our wedding is soon to be."

Louise frowned inwardly at this announcement. But she re-asserted her courage. Tuesday night she was to give a brilliant evening. The grocer would appear in the midst of the elegant cultured men, and Helene would see the contrast.

The fateful night arrived, and Helene moved among the guests radiant and expectant. Late in the evening she saw the grocer enter the big hall. Louise, noting the sudden disappearance of her little friend, divined the reason, and when the guests had departed she went in search of the girl and her grocer lover. As she approached a little screened retreat Helene stepped forth, her eyes like stars.

"Louise, here he is!"

Louise entered the dimly lighted room. A tall form came forward, and she looked into the eyes of her cousin Roger.

"I don't understand," she exclaimed, taking his outstretched hand. "The grocer!"

"I went to the little station near The Oaks one day," he explained, "to reconnoiter and see what he'd got in attraction for you there. I found it an elegant place to fish and loaf and concluded to remain and have Catherine join me. I found the grocer, to whom I applied for lodging, in despair because his clerk had left. I took charge of his store while he went to look up some help, and my first customer was our little friend here. Well, it was a case of love at first sight with me, and I wooed her in the role of grocer from a whim. I revealed my true position to her grandfather, and he found my credentials acceptable, but I did not let Helene know my identity until tonight. I came here to confide in you the other day, and from another whim resolved to let you try your skill at effecting a change of heart. I thought it a good opportunity to show my worldly wise cousin the power of love."

The chimpanzee.

Liberia is the home of the chimpanzee, of the beautiful monkey known as Dandy Jack, of the water chevrons and such strange beasts as the manatee and the armadillo. The chimpanzee is said to bear a near relation to man, and people who do not entertain that view will be able to gauge the sagacity of the animal from the following interesting anecdote: "I saw a young female chimpanzee from the Cavalla river in the possession of the German consul at Cape Palmas. It would have been difficult to meet with a more human creature not actually of the genus homo. This chimpanzee lived in her owner's house as a child might have done, with a negro nurse to look after her. She was generally allowed complete liberty and did not abuse this freedom by breaking or spoiling anything within her reach and, strange to say, was wonderfully clean in her habits, a virtue too often wanting in chimpanzees. Puppe would come when her name was called and fling herself into her master's arms. Puppe's sympathy with strangers was discriminating. If she liked the person introduced she would climb on his knee and tender charming caresses, pushing out the long lips in a pout to be kissed."

Animals That Weep.

Travelers through the Syrian desert have seen horses weep from thirst and from the pain of an injured foot, and camels, it is said, shed tears in streams. A cow sold by its mistress who had tended it from calfhood wept pitifully. A young soko ape used to cry from vexation if Livingstone didn't nurse it in his arms when it asked him to. Tamed apes have died crying, and apes have wept over their young ones slain by hunters. A chimpanzee trained to carry water jugs broke one and fell a-crying, which proved sorrow, though it wouldn't mend the jug. Ravens moved to tears of grief. A giraffe which a huntsman's rifle had injured began to cry when approached. Sea lions often weep over the loss of their young. Gordon Cumming observed tears trickling down the face of a dying elephant. And even an orang outang, when deprived of its mango was so vexed that it took to weeping. There is little doubt, therefore, that animals do cry from grief or weep from pain or annoyance.—Harper's Weekly.

West Uncalled For.

Deacon Elden Libby of Bridgton, Me., was a man of rugged virtues and indomitable will. Some winters ago while working in his wood lot he cut his foot badly, but, bandaging the wound roughly and putting snow into his boot to stop the bleeding, continued at his work until nightfall. Sad to relate, he took cold, and death resulted a few days later. A local character named Farrar was clerk and general utility man at the Cumberland House in Bridgton village at that time and was accustomed to make note on the hotel register from day to day of local events—the weather, etc. In his chronicle of this sad event he wished to indicate that Deacon Libby's death was unnecessary. The following may be seen today on one of the old registers at the Cumberland House:

"Deacon Elden Libby died today. He cut his foot badly, did not have the wound attended to and went to meet his God uncalled for."

Rheumatism

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism. It is a remedy that will eradicate the chronic kind of chronic rheumatism, not only bring growths back to flesh again. That is impossible. But I can now surely kill the pain and purge of this deplorable disease.

In Germany—Dr. Schupp in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Schupp's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable prescription. Without that last ingredient I successfully treated many, many cases of Rheumatism; but now, when I finally secured all the cases of this horrible, much dreaded disease. Three and a half grains of this ingredient in Rheumatic blood, seem to dissolve and pass away under the action of this remedy as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, these poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is now no real need—no actual excuse to suffer longer without help. We sell, and in confidence recommend.
